WHISTLING THE POLICE.

Mistaken a Drunken Man's Call for the Night Inspector's.

James Ford, a colored man about middle age, a denizen of that section of the city formerly called "Foggy Bottom," has been enjoying himself immensely for some time past at the expense of the officers of the 12th precinct. By some means he became possessed of a policeman's whistle, and it seemed that he would make himself happy by whistling it, blaring himself, and gleefully watch the officers respond to the call and search for their supposed brother officer.

The mere fact of the whistle being blown would not have disturbed the officers much were it not for the fact that it sounded like the call of Night Inspector Pearson. To outsiders the blowing of these whistles sounded like the call of the police, and no one knew who was sounding the call, and can tell whether it is one of their number, a sergeant, or the night inspector. By some means the call used by Ford resembled that of the police, and so the officers were greatly disturbed, and it was a great deal of trouble to a great deal of work, as they believed the inspector was in that neighborhood, but they never would see him in person, and so the officers were greatly disturbed.

When they did see him, they did not know that he was the inspector, and so the officers were greatly disturbed.

They went on in this way for some time, and many other officers on the beat had answered the inspector's call and joined in the fruitless search.

Saturday night Officers Keefe and Gehman were on that beat, and when they heard the call, they thought it best to take him to the station house, where they placed a charge of malicious trespass against him. From the manner in which the prisoner acted the officers were led to believe that Gray meant no good, and thought it best to take him into custody.

"Nuthin'" was the reply, in a stupid sort of tone.

"You are rather far away from home to be doing that much."

The officers further questioned the man, and found that he was a colored man, and that he was a member of the Grand Lodge of the District Masonry, in Washington.

At the word of Worshipful Master Blackmore, the 12th Precinct took his seat in the east at seven o'clock sharp, it seemed as if there would not be room enough to accommodate those present. An hour later the spacious banquet room, headed by Grand Master Jesse B. Lee, who was supported by Deputy Grand Master Harrington, and others.

These were responded to by Grand Master Blackmore, Secretary, and others.

"Nuthin'" was the reply, in a stupid sort of tone.
